MOVIE REVIEW ON

"Two"

Two is an anti-war (vietnam) film by satyajit Ray is a worn watching experience however his silent film impact much better than the film with dialogue. The vocabulary between two kids is a metaphor for human life and society in our excessing society.

How the rich kid is oppressing no poor kid is a symbolic representation on first world capitalist to third world countries. It also communication /commenting upon how the imperfection our society is influencing the kid and making home of vocabulary when they must play and enjoy their freedom. In the age group they belong is to enjoy and lives free without any hindrance of competition each and every one want to show off their product things belong to them at higher level if some one shows better than them they feel jealous. Born boys are trying to show their product by showing them but when other one don't get answer may feel jealousy.

In this movie, while one boy turns a moment of loneliness into one boy runs a kite for it as an opportunity for destruction. An unquenchable thirst for variety is the hallmark of a great artist having directed several feature films and one documentary. Ray made a short film in two years 1964 - a 12 minute film under the banner of "Esso World Theatre". They both are flying kite off their kites but the rich boy is clearly not happy with his decision, because he doesn't have the kite to play with because he is confined to his house and his companion now is out there in the open. In a fit of unchildish envy, he shoots the poor boy's kite down with his toy airgun. The rich boy is vicious now, but left all alone, sit and think about what he has done. The film is undeniably the most allegorical of Ray's entire body of work. Ray had been deeply moved by the Vietnam war. In later years, in two, Ray also shows his deep understanding of the mind of child born good and bad a child.
